Changing the Color of Flowers.

M. Filpol, a distinguished savant, ex-hibited to the Scientific Association, Paris, results obtained by subjecting flowers to the influence of a mixture of sulphuric ether and some drops of ammonia. He showed that under the influence of this liquid a great number of violets and roses turned a deep green.

The following experiments may be at-tempted by any reader who is interested: Some ether is poured into a glass, and to it is added a small quantity of liquid ammonia-about one-tenth of the volume. The flowers are then plunged into the fluid (see cut). Flowers whose natural color is red or violet take instantly a bright green tint. Other flowers, the colors of which are not the same shade, take different tints when in contact with ammonical ether. The upper petal of the sweet pea, for in-stance, becomes dark blue, while the lower petal turns a bright green. White flowers usually turn yellow, red geranium turns blue, while red snapdragon turns brown. Yellow flowers preserve their natural color. The action of this liquid is so rapid that it is easy to procure green spots by pouring here and there a drop of the solution. The most curious changes of color are shown by flowers which are composed of different tints, their red streaks turning green, the

A Novelty in Engineering

Several years ago an engineering novelty was developed in the shape of a process of tunneling through quicksand by first freezing it. Of a somewhat similar order is the method lately employed in Germany by Herr Neukirch for securing a founda tion under water. He introduces powdered rement into the sand of the river or harbor bottom by compressed air. The cement "sets" by the action of the water in the usual way and forms shat is virtually a solid rock foundation. This ought to be of value in lighthouse construction, says The New York Sun

Several weeks ago two plainly dressed middle aged women appeared on the streets here as mendicants. Both had accordions, from which they pumped the most doleful specimens of harmony imaginable, and to the accompaniment they sang in high, crucked voices. With resped a liberal harvest. Among the hundreds who saw the women here was a lady who recognized them. "I have seen them in New York, in Portland, Ore., and in Salt Lake City," she said. "They go to Salt Lake City every year to look after valuable property they have there. The truth is, I am told, they are wealthy. They saved several thousand dollars from their street earnings and invested the sum in real estate in Salt Lake City. Then the boom came on there and in a few months the women were rich. Now they have valuable investments in varions cities, and their business judgement seems excellent. The great bulk of their wealth is in Utah, however, and their property there is growing more

"The women like their old profession of harping to the public, and stick to it as industriously as ever. They make a surprisingly large income from it and save a great deal every year, which goes to swell their investments.
